

SELF EVALUATION

You should have a completed draft of your case report in front of you. As you review your draft, you should determine whether it has met the goal stated in each of the following questions. If it has not, then you can note in the space allotted how you will revise your draft to meet the goal.

1 INTRODUCTION

Does the Introduction provide enough background information (information that helps the reader better understand the case report)?

Is all background information relevant to the overall message or main ideas of your case report?

Does the Introduction adequately explain why the case was selected or is worth reading about?

2 MANAGEMENT & OUTCOME

Does the Management and Outcome section present the case in chronological order?

Does the section avoid analysis or opinion?

Are only relevant parts of the call written about?

Does the language display enough precision or detail?

3 CONCLUSION

Are your conclusions or lessons learned adequately supported (through reasoning, evidence, or examples)?

4 STYLE

Is the style appropriate—i.e. the tone objective and the language sufficiently formal?

Does every section demonstrate strong cohesion (clear connection between statements or ideas)?

Are all sentences both concise and clear?

CASE REPORT INFORMATION

This document should be used to evaluate a case report. For more information on writing and submitting Case Reports, go to the AEDR website:

<https://www.aedrjournal.org/case-report-homepage/>

To submit your case report, go here and select “Case Report” in the drop-down menu:

<https://www.aedrjournal.org/submit/>